2014-15 Institutional Review Board Application form, continued

Please complete the following sections in enough detail for the IRB to understand the nature, intent, and procedure of your project. Enter the following information within this document.

1. Title: Perceived & Expressed Discrimination of Urban Refugees in Nairobi, Kenya

2. Project Summary:

This research project will be conducted to determine the prejudice and discriminatory practices against urban refugees in Nairobi, Kenya. The goals of this research will be to determine how urban refugees feel and think about discriminatory practices occurring against their communities in Nairobi and how native Kenyans feel about refugees and discrimination in Nairobi. It will also contribute to the general body of knowledge regarding urban refugees. Refugees and Kenyans will complete a short survey and be interviewed individually regarding their experiences and thoughts on discrimination based on ethnicity and refugee status. Free thought questions will be used, responses codified and analyzed to determine the themes of prejudice towards refugees and common forms of discrimination faced by urban refugees.

3. Research Question: State your research questions and hypotheses if applicable:

Questions:

- What are the differences in perception of discrimination of urban refugees compared to Kenyans in Nairobi?

4. Foreseeable Benefits:

a. What, if any, is the immediate benefit of this research to the participant?

The main benefit of the research for participants is an engaging, cathartic conversation with urban refugees regarding their experiences of discrimination. Additionally, it will provide an increase in public understanding and awareness regarding issues facing refugees living in the city.

b. How does this research benefit the population of persons similar to participants? Provide citations and a brief summary:

This research will contribute to the body of knowledge regarding the well-being and lifestyles of urban refugees and provide a voice for the urban refugee population. It will specifically add insight regarding the issue of discrimination that is largely lacking in this field of research. This will benefit studies related to prejudice, discrimination, stereotypes, xenophobia, and urban refugees. See Scholarly Resource References section on pages 17-18.

c. Summarize scholarly research with citation. Please limit summary to 500 words. Place references on a separate page with this application.

In the world today, "as many as almost seven million refugees and asylum seekers are living in cities, potentially more than half of the world's refugees" (Morand, 2012, p. 4). In East Africa, Kenya receives the bulk of refugees, with roughly 54,000 living in Nairobi. While most African countries restrict refugees to living in camps, Kenya allows greater mobile freedom (Hyndman & Nylund, 1998). However, this does not equal just treatment of urban refugees.

Historically, there are many reasons for Kenya's hesitancy to accept refugees. Violent outbreaks characterize their nations of origins such as Sudan, Somalia, and Ethiopia (Betts, 2010). Some of this violence has been known to follow refugees, leading to terrorist outbursts from Al-Qaeda and most recently from Al-Shabaab (Burns, 2010; Chacha, 2004). Additionally, a history of nationalism from colonial days has been reborn into a second movement, now excluding social groups without a shared history (Kersting, 2009). For refugees entering Kenya within the past decades, there is not enough shared history causing them to be seen as outsiders. Further entrenching false stereotypes, Kenyans are encouraged to believe that refugees are exacerbating problems of urbanization, the struggling economy and national security, often by politicians and the government (Kibreab, 2007; Lomo, 200). This does little to make refugees feel welcome in their first country of asylum.

With these views of refugees, urban refugees tend to face discrimination within the city. Much of this is due to legal barriers and poor implementations of policies intended to aid and protect refugees (Lindley, 2011; Morand, 2012; Umlas, 2011). However, much is also due to societal actions. Refugees seem to experience discrimination on every front. This includes poor access to financial capital, the formal sector of the economy, primary education for children, access to medical care, police brutality, extortion, rape and physical violence, and many others (Campbell & Duplat, 2010; Huot, 2014; Kagwanja, 2000; Karanja, 2010; Metcalfe, et. al., 2011; Parker, 2002; Pavanello, et. al., 2010; Spiegel & Nankoe, 2003; Willems, 2005; "You Are All Terrorists", 2013). Some research has been done relating these experiences with depression and Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (Ellis, et. al., 2008). Discriminatory treatment such as this has many damaging effects on the refugees who live with it daily.

While many of the mentioned studies include refugees' expressed feelings of discrimination and theories for the development of prejudicial thought, there are still gaps in the research. Much of the research associated with prejudice, stereotypes and discrimination has been done in a Westernized, white-black context, not between other ethnic groups and not often in the developing world. Researchers call for greater studies involving multi-group comparison and highlighting a minority-group frame of reference (Bobo & Fox, 2003). Thus, this research would be beneficial to the current body of literature, as it approaches the study from the perspective of the urban refugees and addresses the comparison of two ethnic groups with the majority population.

5. Target Sample Demographics:

a. How many total subjects?

60 participants will be included in the study.

b. What is the age range?

Adults aged 18 and above.

c. Inclusion and exclusion criteria:

Must be an adult refugee living in a slum of Nairobi or must be an adult Kenyan living in Nairobi.

6. Recruitment of Participants

a. How will you obtain names and contact information of potential participants?

Contact information of potential participants will be supplied by outside translators after receiving approval from HIAS clients that they would like to participate in the study. HIAS clients to be approached for the research will be selected based on a randomly selected sampling. Kenyan participants will also be approached based on a randomly selected sampling of HIAS contacts.

b. Who will make initial research contact with the participants?

Outside translators will supply participants with the research information so that they may decide to participate. Clients will be contacted by outside translators based on a randomly selected sampling.

c. What is the venue for recruitment activities?

Recruitment activities will be conducted at HIAS Kenya facilities and frequently used local meeting locations.

d. Provide a copy of the script or text used to recruit participants.

For Refugees

I want to inform you of an opportunity if you would like to participate. A graduate student has decided to do some research on urban refugees and how they experience discrimination in Nairobi. She is looking for refugees that would like to participate in her study and share how they feel about discrimination and maybe some times that they have experienced it. Whether or not you choose to participate in the study, it will not impact any of the services that you receive from HIAS Kenya. If you decide to participate, your information will be kept confidential and you can choose to stop at any time. These papers (informed consent document) contain more information on the research project and contact information if you would like to participate.

For Kenyans

I want to inform you of a new opportunity if you would like to participate. A graduate student has decided to do some research regarding discrimination in Nairobi. She is looking for people who would like to participate in her study and share their thoughts and opinions. If you want to participate in the study, your information will be kept confidential and you can choose to stop at any time. These papers (informed consent document) contain more information on the research project and contact information if you would like to participate.

e. Provide letter(s) of approval from an authorized representative of the agency or agencies that will host data collection.

See page 53 for an authorized letter from HIAS Kenya.

7. Protection of potential participants from perceived coercion in recruitment process

a. What is the PI's professional relationship with potential participants?

My professional relationship will be as a peer researcher and interviewer.

- Will professors be recruiting participants from their current classes? Yes No
- Is there any unequal power relationship that could influence a person's decision to participate in the research? Yes No
- Will large tangible rewards that might induce a potential participant to take unusual risks be offered? Yes No
- Will participants be expected to reveal residency status or legal status? Yes No

If you answered Yes to any of the above, please comment.

Recruitment will be done by outside translators hired by HIAS Kenya and the PI. While some individuals may feel pressured to participate given that HIAS Kenya provides them with social services and they are connected to the research, the use of an outside party should alleviate this feeling. This should also be avoided within the recruiting script as they will be told that their participation will not affect their receipt of services. Participants' names will not be recorded so as to ensure confidentiality. Additionally, there may be some felt difference in power due to the history of colonialism in Kenya and given that the PI is white. This will hopefully be alleviated with the presence of a translator from their own ethnic group.

8. Process to protect privacy

Privacy is defined as having control over extent, timing and circumstance of sharing oneself with others. Threats to privacy are mitigated by the participant's informed consent of participation in the research.

a. What are the specific research related issues that the participant needs to understand in order to give informed consent?

Participants' names will not be collected and age will only be determined based on age groups (young adult, middle-aged, senior). Ethnicity and gender will also be noted. This will remain confidential unless the participant consents to their information or picture being used for the research presentation.

What personal information are you asking the participant to reveal?

Refugee participants will be asked to share a portion of their history as refugees in Kenya as well as some experiences of discrimination due to their refugee status. Kenyan participants will be asked to share their opinions and viewpoints on issues of ethnicity and discrimination in Nairobi.

b. How do you plan to educate potential participants about possible risks in the research?

Potential risks will be made known to potential participants when approached by the translators regarding the research and through the informed consent document. If they consent to participate, they will do so knowing the risks and will have signed the proper informed consent document (pages 19-24) depending on whether they are refugees or Kenyans.

c. How will the participant affirm they understand?

According to the HIAS Kenya, most of their clients do not speak English and are not literate. Potential participants will affirm they understand verbally to a translator and make their mark on the informed consent document along with the translator's signature as a witness.

d. List names of all persons who will discuss Informed Consent documents with potential participants or their guardians.

Name :

Shannon Ericson, Claudine Hada, Augustin Madaga, Zewditu Afwak, and Fardosa Ahmed (Note: Which two refugee ethnic groups to be included in the research is still being decided. Excluding the PI, these are the names of translators who represent four possible groups. Only two will be chosen.)

e. Does that person(s) speak the same language as the potential participants? Yes No

If no, translations will be required of the recruitment scripts, the Informed Consent forms, and the survey instruments for participants. In some cases the translation can be done by the researcher. Additionally, a back translation must be completed independent of the original translator.

Translations of the informed consent forms have been completed. To see these informed consent documents, see pages 19-33.

f. How will you train those people to properly follow the procedures of Informed Consent and to be aware of confidentiality and privacy issues?

I will arrange a meeting with all of the translators that will be approaching the potential participants and a CITI-based training will occur before they begin to obtain consent and contact information or assist in conducting the interviews. This reduced ethics training is designed for those whom English is a second language, their culture has different configurations to US legal systems, and yet they will be assisting a US student in translation or engagement with research subjects. It is not designed to replace the expectation that those engaged with human subject research with APU students and trained in academics, with high level English should access the CITI training. To see this simplified CITI-based training, see pages 36-48. Letters denoting their agreement to this training can be found on pages 49-52.

g. Do all persons who will have any interaction with participants have current certification in the protection of human subjects? Yes No

Do all persons who will have access to research data have current certification in the protection of human subjects? Yes No

Include a copy of all CITI Completion Reports with the application. CITI training must have been completed within the prior three years. If a member of the research team is currently affiliated with another institution, include a copy of their training certificate as required by that institution.

h. After the participant has read the informed consent form, will you affirm with your signature that you believe the participant understands the content of the Informed Consent? Yes No

i. Include a copy of the Informed Consent document, prepared according to the template (found in the Appendix) for face-to-face consent or the template for electronic consent. If children are participants, address the Informed Consent to parents and address an Assent Document to children. If the research involves a focus group, the Informed Consent must state that the Primary Investigator cannot guarantee that participants will honor privacy pledges. Informed Consent templates can be found in the Appendix on pages 42-46.

See pages 19-33 of this document for the Informed Consent documents.

9. Confidentiality

a. Will you store the Informed Consent forms and research data separately? Yes No

b. How will you de-identify research data?

Names of participants will not be noted so that specific data cannot easily be connected to specific participants.

c. Is there a document that links participants' names with corresponding research code numbers?

Yes No

If Yes, is the document stored separately from the research data?

Yes No

d. How will you protect the security of the documents?

Digital copies of the documents will only be on my personal computer under password protection. Any hard copies of the documents will be stored in folders in my personal residency under lock and key.

e. Do you plan to use electronic surveys? Yes No

If Yes, do you agree to decline the privilege of access to personally identifiable data?

Yes No

10. Risks for physical discomfort and emotional distress associated with research procedures

a. What components of the research procedures might cause physical discomfort or emotional distress for participants?

For refugees, talking about past experiences dealing with discrimination in Kenya could be traumatic and distressing for individuals such as refugees who have often already undergone trauma as a result of fleeing their home countries. For Kenyans, it may be uncomfortable to talk about discrimination in Nairobi.

b. What is the anticipated evidence of physical discomfort or emotional distress?

The PI will be observant of the participants' physical responses to interview questions, such as facial expressions, eye contact, body positions, excessive fidgeting and crying. These are common indicators of emotional distress which the PI is prepared to notice due to her bachelor's degree in social work.

c. How will the researcher respond to evidence of physical discomfort or emotional distress?

The PI will respond to these evidences of emotional distress by asking the participants how they are feeling. If participants respond with negative feelings, the PI will suggest ending the interview and refer participants to services provided for them by HIAS Kenya.

d. What resources are available to the participant that may experience distress?

HIAS Kenya has a number of services available to their clients, who will be the participants of this study. These services include counseling which would be of most help in the event that the research interviews remind them of past traumatic events leading to emotional distress. The PI will refer participants to this service.

11. International or Cross Cultural Research

Do potential participants reside outside the US?

Yes No

Will the research be conducted in a cross cultural setting?

Yes No

If Yes to either question provide evidence that research procedures are sensitive to the local research context. Possible sources of evidence are approval from an IRB in the host country, or written approval from a governmental health or education agency in the host country. See page 11 in the handbook for more information.

Written approval of this research is provided by Joshua Mwaka, local resident of Nairobi and Director of MATUL in Kenya who has supervised multiple MATUL theses previously. He is also a professor of Carlile College, a local college which focuses on social and economic development in Africa and informal settlements. Additionally, he is a PhD candidate in social economic development, having experience in research and academic study. He has reviewed this research plan and has deemed it culturally appropriate. See page 54 for this letter.

Some research will require translations of Informed Consent forms and survey instruments for participants. Translations are generally done by someone other than the researchers. Additionally, a back translation must be completed independent of the original translator.

12. Quantitative Research – Survey Methods

a. For paper and pencil questionnaires, identify who will distribute questionnaires to participants and how participants will return marked questionnaires to the researcher.

The PI will distribute the surveys to participants during a short meeting for the purpose of conducting the survey and will collect them at the end of the meeting. For groups that are less literate, the surveys will be done orally, in private, with the translator and the PI.

- b. For web platform responses to questionnaires, identify materials for directing the participant to the platform and how participant will respond.

N/A

- c. Describe the evidence that questionnaires are appropriate for the participants.

Free thought surveys will be best for analyzing paradigms regarding discrimination. For refugee participants, this will be conducted orally and will be written for Kenyans due to illiteracy and literacy statistics. HIAS Kenya believes that these surveys will be appropriate for the participants and will be particularly helpful in uncovering the true thoughts and opinions of the participants. This is also supported by the research findings of Niemann, et. al. (1994).

- d. Describe your plan for analyzing questionnaire data. List a specific statistical technique (univariate or multivariate).

Data will be analyzed first using a univariate analysis to obtain an overall understanding of felt discrimination of refugees by ethnicity and general prejudice of Kenyans towards non-Kenyans. Then, a multivariate analysis will be conducted to determine if age and gender has any correlation with the felt discrimination of refugees or the general prejudice of Kenyans towards non-Kenyans.

13. Quantitative Methods – Experimental

- a. Describe research question and relevant hypotheses
- b. Describe independent and dependent variables
- c. Describe your procedure for random selection and assignment of participants to experimental and control groups.
- d. Describe venue for research activities
- e. Describe independent variable materials or activities
- f. What experimental interventions will be used to measure independent and dependent variables
- g. Describe activities and/or materials for the control group
- h. Describe other procedures designed to enhance internal and external validity.
- i. Identify data collection intervals
- j. Describe plan for monitoring treatment integrity
- k. Describe evidence that experimental and control materials and/or activities are appropriate for participants
- l. Describe evidence that measures are appropriate for participants

m. Describe your data analysis plan

14. Qualitative Research Methods

a. Explain theory/conceptual framework guiding data collections, including reference to established researchers who have conducted studies with similar procedures.

This research and data collection is based off of action research and participatory research approaches. Questions during personal interviews will be used to guide the discussion, but the interview will largely be determined by the participant. By using personal interviews and stories, the research will be more observational in nature. These methods have been found to be particularly effective for eliciting viewpoints and determining patterns of thought (Desai & Potter, 2006).

b. Explain steps taken to ensure methodological and data analytic rigor (including but not limited to the utilization of qualitative analysis software programs), including reference to established researchers who have conducted studies using similar procedures.

The methodology for this research has been reviewed and revised by qualified HIAS Kenya staff members to ensure that it is statistically and academically significant as well as culturally appropriate. Additionally, all questions are written to be objective and open-ended to ensure that the researcher is not leading the participants, using a free response methodology. This has been proven to be effective in obtaining automatic responses of participants, especially in regard to opinions relating to ethnicity and stereotypes (Niemann, et. al., 1994). While the research includes the use of a voluntary sample which limits the study, this seems to be the most ethical way of recruiting research participants.

c. Do you plan to interview participants? Yes No

d. Interview questions are found on page 15.

e. Data analysis procedures, including coding and software

Data from interviews will be analyzed and coded according to key words, phrases, or paradigms. This data will then be entered into SPSS for further analyzing and statistical results. Possible coding categories would be time lived in Kenya, violence, extortion, sexual abuse, legal barriers, police brutality, physical identifiable, gender, etc.

f. Do you plan a focus group? Yes No

If Yes, focus group questions are found on page _

g. Data analysis procedures, including coding and software

Training in Ethics in Human Subject Research

Module Training for MATUL student research support staff

“This reduced ethics training is a simplified training designed for those for whom English is a second language, their culture has different configurations to U.S. legal systems, and yet they will be assisting a U.S. student in translation or engagement with research subjects.”

Introduction

This training will cover:

- How to decide what are appropriate risks and benefits of research when people are involved.
- Guidelines for how to select people to participate in research
- Informed consent in different research settings

Ethics in Research involves three basic ethical principles:

- Respect for Persons
 - People should be allowed to freely make their own decisions
 - People who cannot make their own decisions (children, mentally ill, etc.) should have protection
- Kindness: Do not harm. Maximize possible benefits & minimize possible harms
- Justice: Fairness in distribution of possible benefits and risks

The implications in practice are:

1. Get Informed Consent

People involved in research can choose what will or will not happen to them

They have enough information about the research, understand it, and willingly agree to participate

2. Assessment of Risk & Benefits

The researcher and another group of people on a review board, separately review the research proposal and to see if the possible risks and benefits are responsible and fair

3. Selection of Participants

Do not take advantage of vulnerable populations (e.g. minorities, economically disadvantaged, prisoners, mentally ill)

(The Belmont Report became a basis for development of these ideas)

Expanded Ethical Principles of the Belmont Report

1. Respect for Persons

a. Independence (Self-rule)

People must be empowered to make decisions about their own actions and life

People's opinion and choices must be respected

People with limited ability to make decisions must be protected as they agree to what is being asked

People who cannot give meaningful consent must not participate in the research

Example: Children have less ability to make decisions. Consent must come from legal guardian, and researcher must explain to the child the study and process in a way that they can understand.

b. Voluntary

People are free to choose to participate in research

People are free to end their participation for any reason without any consequences

c. Informed Consent

Gives possible participants information they need to make a decision

Helps possible participants to understand information that is given

Shows that the person has a choice to participate in the research

Must include the purpose of study

Must be written so those reading it will understand, this may include a translation into another language

2. Kindness

- Do not harm
- Maximize possible benefits and minimize possible harm
- Respecting peoples decisions and protecting them from harm
- Making efforts to do what is good for them and their well-being

Kindness Defined:

Do not harm

Maximize possible benefits and minimize possible harm

Respecting peoples decisions and protecting them from harm

Making efforts to do what is good for them and their well-being

Types of Harm:

Psychological, physical distress

Social disrespect or hard to reputation

Putting people in the way of legal harm (for example if you are researching about someone's illegal activities)

Expanded Ethical Principles of the Belmont Report

Types of harm:

- Psychological, physical distress
- Social disrespect or damage to reputation
- Putting people in the way of legal harm (for example if you are researching about someone's illegal activities)

3. Justice:

- Fairness in distribution of risks and benefits. Balance the Three Principles:

Respect, Kindness, and Justice: Must all have the same moral force.

- What are 3 types of Harm?

- What are the 3 principles Ethical Principles?

Human Subject Research

Human Subject Research

- "a living individual about whom a researcher (whether professional or student) conducting research obtains (1) Data or information through intervention or interaction with the individual, or (2) private information that can make their identity known."

What is Human Subject Research?

- "a living individual about whom a researcher (whether professional or student) conducting research obtains (1) Data or information through intervention or interaction with the individual, or (2) private information that can make their identity known."
- "About whom" (not what) means
 - Counts if information is about someone or themselves, or their opinion, characteristics, and behavior
 - Does not include information about something
- "Interaction" means
 - Communication of any form (face to face or even completely electronic or paper interactions)
- "Intervention" means
 - Physical procedures used to collect data (i.e. experiments)
- "Private information that can make their identity known" means
 - Information about behavior that happens in a public place where a person can expect no one is observing or recording
 - Information given specific purposes by an individual that a person can expect to be private (e.g. medical, school and work records)
 - Information that identifies an individual

Assessing and Evaluating Risk

Balancing Risk and Potential Benefits

- Give clear and all the necessary information
- Confidentiality cannot be promised within a focus group setting

There are Three General Risks possible with Participation in Social and Behavioral Sciences Research

1. Invasion of privacy means

Personal information is collected without the participant's knowledge or agreement to do so

Identity is revealed although it was said that this would not happen

2. Breach of confidentiality means

If someone who is not meant to see a person's private details, for example about their health, but it is revealed, that person could lose their job.

Data collected made public about sexual orientation could result in a loss of social status and in some countries could get them arrested.

Workers asked to share their attitudes about their managers, could lose their jobs or not receive a promotion if the information is not protected.

Information about illegal activities or immigrant status can have serious legal consequences for subjects.

3. Research procedures

Review the literature in a given field to consider possible risks of a participant and how they may be protected.

Evaluating Risk

Probability and Amount of Harm:

How likely is it that harm will occur?

How bad is the harm if it happens?

Situation and Time: Some risk is more likely to happen in certain cultures or places and at certain times

Different Populations: There will be different risks for different kinds of people

- What are the 3 General Risks with participation in Social and Behavioral Science Research?

- What are the 3 factors in evaluating risk?

Assessing and Evaluating Risk

Evaluating Risk Cautions

- Researchers usually...
 - Underestimate risks involved in activities that they are familiar with.
 - Overestimate the benefits of things that are important to them.
- Possible Participants usually...
 - Overestimate the probability of harm when harms are severe.
 - Underestimate the probability when harms are less severe.
 - Independent evaluation of risk is critical.

Balancing Risk and Potential Benefits

- Give clear and all the necessary information.
- Confidentiality cannot be promised within a focus group setting.
- Tell the entire process and plan to the participants.
- Design the research to have the least possible risk.

When the Main Risk is the Data

- Remove all identifying factors as soon as possible.
- Give participants codes instead of using their name.
- Keep code lists and data files in separate safe locations.
- Use computer passwords that only the researchers know.
- Access and store data on computers without Internet connections.

When the Primary Source of Risk Is the Consent Document

If the only thing that identifies a participant and places him/her at risk for socially damaging or illegal activity is the consent document, it can be removed from the process with permission and substituted for another form (i.e. cover letter, informational sheet or verbal script)

■ What should you do if when the primary source of risk is the consent form?

Privacy and Confidentiality

- Are there are enough provisions for protecting the privacy of participants and keeping the confidentiality of data?

Privacy: related to methods of gathering information from research

Confidentiality: creating ways to protect the information given by the participant

- Are there are enough provisions for protecting the privacy of participants and keeping the confidentiality of data?

- Privacy: related to methods of gathering information from research

- Confidentiality: creating ways to protect the information given by the participant

What Private Information Needs to be Protected

- Private information

Information about behavior that occurs in a setting that a person can reasonably think that no observation or recording is taking place

Information which has been provided for specific purposes by an individual that he or she can expect will not be made public (for example, medical information)

Privacy and Research Methods

- Participant- Observational (or Ethnographic) Studies: Researchers are participants as well as researchers, they have two roles

If participants are observed and private identifiable information is gathered about them without their knowledge and consent, there is a clear violation of rights to privacy and this is not allowed

- Focus Groups (where a group of people discuss an issue)

Researchers cannot control if group members discuss things outside of the group

Researchers must protect recordings and transcripts themselves

Researchers cannot ask participants to legally agree to protect the information shared

Privacy and Confidentiality

- Snowball Sampling: A technique to find participants by asking participants to assist the researcher by providing names of other persons that may be interested in the study.

Extra care should be taken if the participant is part of a vulnerable population (e.g. children, pregnant women, prisoners, elderly, abused, etc.)

Privacy and Reporting Laws

- International Privacy Laws

Researchers conducting research abroad should identify privacy laws at the research site that may be relevant for the conduct of research with human participants.

Certificate of Confidentiality

- Issued to protect identifiable research information from being shared
- May be granted when collecting information that, if shared, could have negative effects for participants or damage their financial standing, employability, or reputation
- May be secured for any sensitive research, regardless of the funding source
- Allows the researcher and others who have access to research records to refuse to share identifying information on individual research participants

Information that can be protected includes, but is not limited to:

Substance abuse or other illegal behaviors

Sexual attitudes

Genetic information

Psychological well-being

- What are the 3 Research Methods in this section?

International Research

Local Research Context

- The researcher should have good knowledge of the local context so the rights of participants are protected. Local context knowledge may include:
 - socioeconomic, political, and cultural factors
 - relationships between parents and their children
 - whether certain questions maybe offensive
 - authority structures

- What key areas a Local Researcher should have good knowledge in when doing Inter-national Research?

Securing Local Approval

- Local approval of proposed research may be required in some countries, Informed Consent in an international context:
 - Besides participants, who else needs to give consent to research?
 - Is the correct language being used so participants can understand?
 - Is written or oral consent more appropriate?
 - Use of interpreters?
 - Is the age of minors different?
 - Who is the local contact person?

Quiz

(Must get 3 out of 4 right or have to reset the test)

Answer (choose 3):

- A. Respect for Persons
- B. Writing the research study well
- C. Kindness
- D. Justice
- E. Finding a good research topic

What are three main types of risks in participating in research?

- A. Invasion of privacy
- B. Breach of confidentiality
- C. Becoming famous

With foreigners studying internationally which of the following do you not need to consider when evaluating ethics in research:

- Is the correct language being used so participants can understand?
- Is written or oral consent more appropriate?
- Who is the local contact person?

To Whom It May Concern:

My name is Joshua Mwaka and I am the Director of MATUL at Carlile College. I am writing on behalf of Shannon Ericson who is conducting research regarding discrimination of urban refugees in Nairobi. I have reviewed her research plan and affirm that it is both culturally sensitive and will be translated into the local language if necessary. As a local resident of Kenya, I believe that she will conduct her research in a culturally appropriate and respectful manner.

If there are any questions regarding this research, please contact me or the student.

Sincerely,

Joshua Mwaka
